“The Last Shithole For Clown Intellectuals”

‘Trust me, we’re not a cult,’ Says Frat House in Complete Unison

By Benjamin Crews

BINGHAMTON, NY – The act of going to college is often credited with helping up-and-coming adults to discover previously untapped facets of their personalities, culminating in them finding their identity. To that end, lots of male freshman turn to joining fraternities to help them discover who they are, with varying results.

However, due to increased exclusivity and severity of hazing in these institutions, many have started to question whether fraternity houses are essentially glorified cults. Jarvis Stevens, a freshman who is currently undertaking the process of rushing a frat, was asked to describe the nature of hazing.

“Wearing a pineapple on my head to lecture every day isn’t so bad,” said the determined freshman. “Now that Chad and the rest of the brothers have let me cut eyeholes out, I’ve finally stopped bumping into walls and tripping over all of the chairs.”

According to Jarvis, Chad has assumed the leader position in this fraternity. Chad has been very vocal about his disagreement of comparisons being made between fraternities and cults.

“Sure, we might ask people for money in exchange for social acceptance and inclusion in inside events,” explained Chad. “But I bet most cults don’t put Monster Energy in their jungle juice.”

Despite Chad’s assertion that he is not running a cult, sources report that the frat house holds a sort of prayer ritual each night: to start, each brother kneels and pray to a button-down shirt from Ralph Lauren and a pair of Sperry shoes, reciting sacred verses from the popular song “Like a G6.”

Once the beginning prayer is over, Chad will lead a sermon instructing the frat brothers on how to attract women. The leader sits down each brother down and recalls the story of how he once had a threesome with a set of triplets at a mixer, brimming with pride. Then, Chad will recall the time when had a foursome with a set of triplets during that same mixer. And then there was the other time when Chad had a six-some with the pair of twins and the set of triplets during that same mixer. Sources were able to confirm that Chad read these passages out of the sacred Book of Dude-eronomy.

“Sure, we might ask people for money in exchange for social acceptance and inclusion in inside events,” explained Chad. “But I bet most cults don’t put Monster Energy in their jungle juice.”

With the sermon concluded, each frat brother recites the sacred words posted on a tapestry on the walls of a dingy, beer-soaked dance floor: “Trust me, we’re not a cult,” they robotically chant. “Now, how about you and I go upstairs?”

At press time, sources reported sighting these fraternity brothers carrying Jarvis’s lifeless body wrapped in a carpet and dumping it into the Susquehanna River. The freshman had presumably succumbed to alcohol poisoning and died.

Gamer Attempts to Speedrun War in Ukraine; Dies

War, what is it good for? Playing soldier and attempting to reap personal ego-boosting glory in a foreign army while innocent civilians die, obviously. This weekend, Twitch streamer Hans Cummings decided to do just this; he recorded his attempt to blast through the Russian invasion of Ukraine at any percent in hopes to gain more subs for his milquetoast speedrunning channel. Instead of amassing a greater following, he amassed a round's worth of ammunition into an already shattered chest; one that he had exploded moments earlier after attempting to utilize a speedrunning technique called a "superslide".

For the uninformed, speedrunning is a popular challenge where someone attempts to complete a video game in as fast a time as possible. Whether they will use shortcuts, glitches, lies, exploits, or tools to attain their record time is determined by which sort of run they decide to go for, and the self-imposed conditions that they must meet in order to "win". Cummings considered this to be "obliterating Putin in the very throne he sits on". According to his post-landing stream, Cummings believed that once he met this condition, he would bring about an instant end to the war in Ukraine.*

Cummings, known online as QuickFish2Catch, had proposed the half-baked idea on a stream that took place following the day that Russia announced its initial invasion of Ukraine. He insisted that all funds raised over a period of two weeks would go towards helping Ukraine. In a way, they did. Fueling his trip to the motherland with GFuel sponsorships and donations from his prior streams, Cummings brandished a variety of "tactical" gear. These included a parachute, a really cool military coat from a surplus store that had no tactical advantage whatsoever, dozens of compressed air cans, and a variety of airsoft weaponry (I cannot specify what weaponry because that requires looking up firearms on school WiFi). Despite all this community support, viewers knew he was practically destined to die for a cause. A few members of his chat raised the idea that he could have at least paid for the GoPro he used to livestream his foray into battle, but they were promptly banned by Cummings's moderation team.

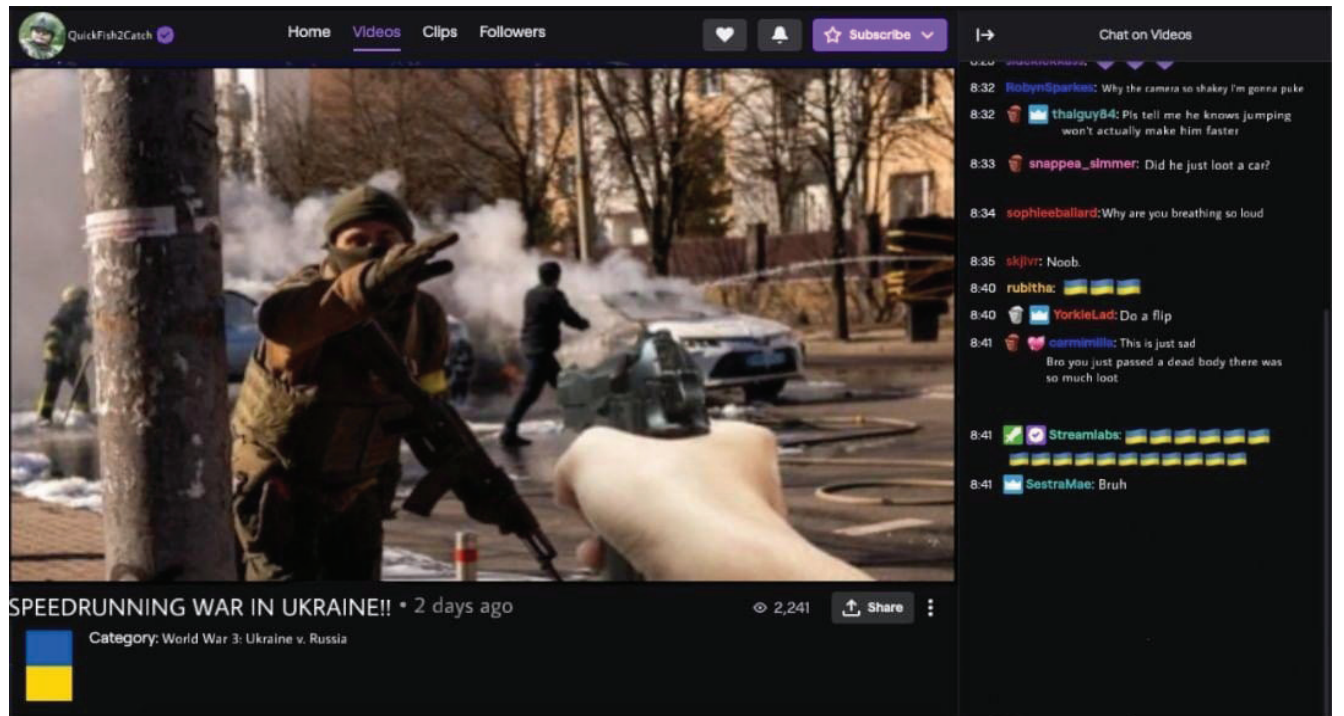

Following the initial "drop" into the city of Kyiv via a Mil Mi-7 Russian supply helicopter that Cummings somehow managed to hitch a ride on, countless viewers got motion sickness from a combination of his stream's first-person perspective and a technique he referred to as gaining "M-speed." This entailed jumping as much as possible whenever he ran. By his own account, this technique would enable him to achieve airborne speeds not possible through groundwork alone. However, Cummings quickly abandoned it after realizing how out of breath it made him and nearly suffering an asthma attack, which he claimed "would have ended the run early".

This was far from the only strategy he implemented, however. "Whenever he tried to enter a building," General Ivan Kravchenko recounts, "he would start erratically rubbing himself on the walls and the door. I asked him if he was experiencing the side effects of chemical warfare. He explained to me that he was trying to save time by building enough speed to enter a parallel universe since he couldn't just 'clip' through it. I went 'okay' and let him continue. Crazy Americans..." Most witnesses agree that he was losing more time than anything, but Cummings insisted that he was "playing the long-game as the ultimate shortcut."

Cummings was ultimately cut down after attempting a superslide. Considered the quickest mode of travel in Ocarina of Time, "super-sliding" entails back flipping directly in front of an active explosive and immediately deploying a shield so the recoil allows one to drift across the ground. Although Cummings was able to successfully achieve the first step to the shock of his viewers, the ballistic shield he looted from an abandoned car was not enough to actually protect him from the following pointblank blast. While the barely alive Cummings managed to survive this initial blast, he was promptly gunned down by enemy fire moments later. His last words between these two events were on how the explosion would shave seconds off his run for the distance it nevertheless brought him and he was right; he just didn't realize how many seconds it would shave.

Oddly enough, at least one private infantry recognized the streamer as he darted through Kyiv. When interviewed, they gave no effort in hiding the various Nazi insignia patches that riddled their armor. "I love raiding Twitch streams with slurs," captive Commander Malen'kyy Viner explained after we ripped the tape off his mouth, "and now I get to take part in the coolest thing ever with one of the guys I loved to raid the most. I love killing, it's just so cool." Upon gathering everything needed from them, we at The BUTT decided to demonstrate just how cool killing is for these guys by personally executing them and dispersing their equipment to those in need. "If he was alive today," Twitch-streamer-based Twitch streamer Twitch_Str3am3r postulates, "I imagine he'd be making a teary-eyed apology video denouncing these sorts of fans while doing whatever he could to scrub clips of him fighting alongside them (because I guess he was too busy speedrunning to notice their glaring Swastikas) off Twitter."

Cummings serves as a reminder to stop, to think, and to please not perform sick tricks in front of bombs in warzones or, if you do, to not hold this website liable. I want this war over with as soon as possible myself, especially since I'm of Ukrainian ancestry (Слава Україні П'ю́тін — хуйло), but speedrun strategies may not always be the best means to achieve that. Please speedrun responsibly, and preferably do so with your ass planted firmly on a couch or gaming chair. However, despite his new existence as bits of "gibs" strewn about the city of Kyiv, there is a diamond and gold lining to Cummings' death. His stream is still live and, at the rate his timer is going, he may be able to achieve the world record for the longest speedrun in warfare posthumously. Popular archive Speedrun.com has made a statement clarifying that it will not be counting any other true combat run after this as to discourage copycats because someone "dying on stream" just isn't enough for most gamers.

By Maxwell Maceluch

Instead of amassing a greater following, he amassed a round's worth of ammunition into an already shattered chest; one that he had exploded moments earlier after attempting to utilize a speedrunning technique called a "superslide".

*Someone should pick up from where he left off, hopefully via alternate means. We'd all love to see his goal become a reality; killing world leaders is certainly an efficient strategy when it comes to ending global conflict, and who wouldn't want Putin to get the Gaddafi treatment (apart from Putin). Still, real life speedrunning probably isn't the best way to go about this.

Elon Musk Denies His Testing on Monkeys Is Inhumane: 'I would do it to humans too'

By Brendan Boyce

Earlier this week Elon Musk, father of X Æ A-Xii and Times Man of the Year, an award he shares with other prominent figures like Gandhi, Hitler, Stalin and You, faced public backlash for physically and psychologically torturing monkeys with dystopian computer brain chips. He announced through Twitter that he was too busy to care about their extreme suffering because he was working intently with the Binghamton University Times Tribune on a new cryptocurrency called ButtCoin in order to compete with the Baxter NFT (we put that in our first print edition as a joke, but since then the Baxter NFT market has gone completely rogue. We at the BUTT know that if we pulled the rug from under our shitcoin the SA would definitely ban us as an organization, but fuck you we're gonna steal your money anyways.)

The BUTT might feel slightly guilty about turning a blind eye to animal abuse, but this Elon guy isn't like the other billionaires, he's just so cool and down to earth, and definitely isn't putting that up as a front so people will like him more, no, no, he would never do that, he's so cool and stuff. All I'm saying is that if I have to choose between the Metaverse and the Shibaverse for the dystopian nightmare our world will become, I'll take the Shibaverse. Anyways, Musk said that he followed all regulations and guidelines for animal testing that were in the agreement for his bribe money. He also admitted that sending a monkey into every rocket ship he's ever launched was not within federal guidelines, but he just thought it was fun, because Elon is just a fun loving guy like you and me.

Amidst all the public backlash, Elon decided to tweet a meme that looked like it came directly out of a collective post on iFunny from 2010, comparing Adolf Hitler and Justin Trudeau, which is a wholly unfair comparison, because Hitler never wore blackface. His twitter became worse and worse, belching out a frenzy of dad jokes, spaceship launches, and stale memes. This is simply another reminder that despite how badly Musk wants to pretend he's different from other Silicon Valley billionaires, he's still a massive asshole.

Here Are the Companies That Will Be Sponsoring the Next US Shipment of Weapons to Ukraine

By Brendan Boyce

In America's newest attempt to support Ukraine, children can now gamble away their parents' money to help the war effort. For every Raid Shadow Legends Loot Crate bought, 3 or 4 cents will be spent on missiles and ammunition to kill communist pigs. Finally, microtransactions can be a positive in this world, like the time I bought a skin in Overwatch that made Widowmaker's ass look great. Other companies that wanted to be known for something other than obnoxious ads people skip over soon followed suit by following the hot new trend of being super pro-Ukraine.

Manscaped pledged to give a percent of their profit to Ukraine, and boast a new razor so fine that you can shave "Fuck Russia" on your taint, to let anyone eating your ass know your political view on the war. Raycon will buy a 7.62 round destined for the heart of a young Russian soldier that doesn't want to fight for every user that plays "Ukraine Will Not Perish" on their shitty airpod ripoffs. For every BUTTCoin bought on Crypto.com, the company will give the Ukrainian military NFTs of guns. For every single Vbuck purchased on the Epic Games Store, Epic Games will give their players a personalized message telling them how much of a crippling disappointment they are to their family, and will also donate a chug jug to a horrifically injured Ukrainian civilian selected at random.

Although I have my critiques of capitalism, this is a great example of how corporations can hop on a trend as a marketing ploy and do nothing to help anyone whatsoever. Wars are not won with brute force, or diplomacy, or strategy, but by claiming your reward code for a completely free Epic Raid Shadow Legends character. Build out your deck, immerse yourself in the complex customizable RPG systems, and win epic duels in PvP combat so you can convince yourself that you aren't wasting your life that slowly passes by you, one day at a time, as a quietly building cynical malaise creeps its way into every aspect of your life until you don't care about anything in life but the sweet, sweet nectar of another epic PvP victory in Raid Shadow Legends.

Studying Abroad in Ukraine? Here Are Some Travel Tips You Should Know! (Brought To You By Raytheon)

Tip #1 – Don't be in an active warzone.

Probably the most obvious tip. If your study abroad experience happens to be in a country that is currently at war, avoiding areas that are experiencing active combat and military operations will greatly increase your chances of survival.

Tip #2 – Befriend members of the local military.

In the event that the going gets rough and the city your program is based in needs to be evacuated, being a familiar face to a few members of the army can get you on a bus/boat/plane earlier than others. You certainly don't want to be caught behind enemy lines.

Tip #3 – Befriend members of the enemy military.

In the worst-case scenario where you've found yourself behind enemy lines, don't fret because Raytheon has you covered. Befriending the opposing military may get you a long way and help you avoid imprisonment, torture, or death. Things that can curry favor with the opposing side include sharing snacks with soldiers or offering intelligence and information.

Tip #4 – Form a militia.

This is a riskier play but being part of a local militia gives you the opportunity to defend yourself. If all else fails, having a bit of combat training is better than having none!

Tip #5 – Join the local military.

What better way to survive a war than being in the military? State-of-the-art weaponry, rigorous training, and working with other professionals will massively help you stay alive when the shooting starts. And of course, it goes without saying that there is nothing more patriotic than defending American interests thousands of miles away from American soil.

To unlock the rest of the tips, head over to Raytheon Technologies website and preorder the Raytheon Tech War Survival Guide for only $49.99. The guide also includes two complimentary MREs and a deluxe M4A1 rifle keychain.

Raytheon Technologies is currently looking for the best and brightest engineers to work for its research and development branch. Come help make the world a better place and the future a brighter one at Raytheon!

TAPS System Begins Issuing Citations For Students' Future Parking Violations

By Max Lieber

This Wednesday, Transportation and Parking Services announced the introduction of the new Preemptive Parking E-Enforcement system, or the PPEE system, to campus. While the system's implementation was officially announced today, it actually went into effect this Sunday, unbeknownst to students.

The system is believed to have initially began as a project conceived by a group of engineering students in their Senior Design class. The system utilizes "machine learning algorithms" that take into account factors that include but are not limited to: students' previous parking violations, the make and model of their vehicle, whether or not the student has a custom license plate, their political orientation, their race, and their favorite color. According to the executive director of TAPS, Tanya Husick, "the PPEE system uses these factors to determine the likelihood of a student deciding to commit a parking violation in the near future. They may not realize it, but there are a lot of things that can tell us about their intentions." Many students and faculty report that the system has indiscriminately ticketed those with and without campus parking passes. Following these complaints, Husick has made a public statement explaining this phenomenon: "if you receive a ticket for not having the proper campus parking authorization despite being properly registered in the campus database, the PPEE system may have determined that you will not have the pass when you were, or rather will be, ticketed, either due to the fact that you will park in the wrong lot for your parking pass or that parking pass will be revoked after you received too many future error, and the fact that we sometimes just like

This suit has also been produced by Watson and modeled after advanced Ghanian military technology. The suit will reportedly enable the select TAPS enforcers who pilot them to "seamlessly remove improperly and illegally parked cars from campus" via a powerful throwing mechanism.

Even though the PPEE system has proven itself to be rather unpopular among the student body, the University administration has reaffirmed that it will continue to issue citations for any parking violations up to three weeks after the current given date. It is unclear whether or not the administration has chosen to retain the system out of choice, or out of fear that it will do something drastic upon finding out that it will be shut down. However, it is clear that Melinda Smith will continue to cry herself to sleep every night.

Conservative Student's Toes Unfairly Targeted By Professor's Woke 'Progressive Stubbing' Policy

By Brendan Boyce

Earlier this week, a forgettable looking white guy named Pete Levins stubbed his toe in his sociology class and proceeded to storm out of the room after screaming out a tirade about how the leftist woke mob didn't want white people to have toes. He immediately raced to his local Fox News station, where they ate up all of his bullshit, and proceeded to completely destroy all of the liberals with facts, instead of using stupid liberal emotions.

There was a section in the class syllabus that read, "If you stub your toe and you're white, don't make a super big deal out of it, because nobody really cares." Apparently, this was an infringement of his personal feelings, and the constitution maybe.

His statement claimed that "White privilege isn't real. Yes, I am studying economics and will work for my dad's finance firm due to pure nepotism, but that isn't because I'm white, but because I'm better than you. Everyone thinks I look like some dumb frat-guy, just because I am some dumb frat-guy, but they should be treating me better, I'm white and rich after all."

Binghamton University quietly took the "Progressive Stubbing" section out of the professor's syllabus, because the student's dad recently gave a 60 million dollar grant to the University so they could build a baseball stadium nobody asked for.

"The tension culminated in a protest on The Spine, which devolved into people hitting each other with signs. It was very enjoyable to watch."

The professor of the class is now getting death threats from Facebook boomers for tarnishing academia by pushing a postmodern pro-Marxist cultural takeover of Western values through identity politics. Not to be racist... but... I mean, how could she put something like that in her syllabus. Whenever I stub my toe, I feel the patriarchal urge to throw a temper tantrum and complain to my nearest right leaning news source.

The tension culminated in a protest on The Spine, which devolved into people hitting each other with signs. It was very enjoyable to watch. The real lesson to be learned is if you're extremely racist, like me, probably take something other than sociology to fill out your resume. If anyone has any complaints about being discriminated against on campus for being white, please contact the BUTT, and we will gladly write an entire article making fun of you.

Idiot Freshman Raises Hand at Rhetorical Question

By Travis Steiner

"It was devastating; like watching a dog get flattened by a truck," says classmate Phill Collins. At 11:13am on Tuesday, February 8th, Phill, and several other Philosophy 101 students witnessed a tragedy. A freshman in the class, who requested we keep their identity anonymous, raised his hand at the professor's rhetorical question.

According to classmates, the freshman in question has been known to "raise his hand way too fuckin' much". His excessive hand raising has reportedly gotten to the point where students in the back of class groan when they see the student in question's hand go up, and to the point where this student has earned their own codename in the class GroupMe. Time and time again, this student was known to raise their hand at virtually any chance they had, be it an interjection, a genuine question, an answer to the professor's question, or even the answer to another student's question. But this time, it was different.

Phill stated that the professor was going over their weekend reading when the professor asked a blatant rhetorical question; one that rang in the ears of each student as a question meant to ponder, not to answer. That is, for all students except the notorious freshman sitting smugly in the front of the class. After the question left the professor's mouth, the room was completely silent except for the rustling of a jacket, the sliding of fabric against the torso, and the subtle noises produced by the raising of a hand. The collective mind of the students in the class went from philosophical reasoning to utter pity in mere seconds. The professor, whose facial expression was described as similar to that of "a deer in headlights", appeared to be unable to speak or move.

Witnesses reported that several students got up and left, unable to handle the stench of the sweat produced by the anxiousness of this freshman. Others, who had been paralyzed by the sheer volume of secondhand embarrassment, were escorted out by the righteous workers of Harper's Ferry. To a near empty classroom, the professor announced that he will not be finishing the semester, stating that "... this was my breaking point, I can't take it anymore." As for the freshman, he has yet to be seen since the end of class on Tuesday. As a message to all students going forward: Please, for the love of God, refrain from being like this student. Rhetorical questions and regular questions are significantly different – learn the fucking difference.

THE CAMPUS IS ALIVE

By Maxwell Mareluch

WE WERE DUMBASSES TO ASSUME THE GIANT, PULSATING BU BRAIN TUCKED AWAY IN THE BOWELS OF THE FINE ARTS BUILDING WAS THE END OF IT. COMPLETE IDIOTS. GOD, HOW STUPID COULD YOU GET? SERIOUSLY? WHAT GOOD WOULD A BRAIN BE WITHOUT A BODY? I MEAN I'VE GOTTEN SOME NICE BRAIN BEFORE, BUT THAT'S BESIDE THE POINT. HAVE YOU EVER WONDERED WHY IT'S CALLED THE SPINE???? HUH????? WHAT ABOUT DICKINSON???? WONDER WHY SODEXO FOOD TASTES LIKE THAT, WHY IT LEAVES STUDENTS CONSTANTLY SHITTING THEIR OWN BRAINS OUT? DID YOU THINK IT WAS BECAUSE SODEXO'S FRENCH? WELL YEAH, ACTUALLY, THAT CHECKS OUT, BUT NO.

THE STUDENT BODY AS A WHOLE IS LUCKILY GONE FOR BREAK, BUT THAT UNFORTUNATELY MAKES IT EASIER FOR THE "CAMPUS BODY" TO HONE IN ON THOSE THAT REMAIN. NORMALLY, THE FACULTY DRIVE AROUND IN THEIR BULBOUS LITTLE FUNNY WHITE CARS, WAITING FOR THE UNASSUMING STUDENT PASSING BY TO GO ON THEIR PHONE, AND THEN THEY WHACK THEM WITH BINGHAMTON CERTIFIED BATONS BEFORE BURYING THEM IN THE POPULAR BURIAL SITE THAT IS THE NATURE PRESERVE. THE LACK OF PROPER SALTING ON THE SLANTED BACK OF THE BEAST THAT IS BINGHAMTON IS AN INTENTIONAL DECISION ON THEIR PART AS IT ALLOWS THEM TO SWITCH FROM DIRECTLY TAKING CARE OF STUDENTS THEMSELVES TO LETTING GRAVITY WORK ITS MAGIC.

NOW, WITH NO ONE LOOKING, WHAT WE'VE ASSUMED TO BE THE SPINE'S TILES OPEN UP TO SWALLOW STUDENTS WHOLE. THEY ARE, IN REALITY, A FORM OF SHELL PLATING; THEY LOOSEN UP AND SQUIRT ACID WHEN PRESSURE IS PLACED ON THEM AS A DEFENSE MECHANISM. MOLECULAR ANALYSIS SUGGESTS THAT SODEXO HARVESTS THIS SUBSTANCE TO FEED AND WEAKEN STUDENTS SO THEY CAN GET BLUDGEONED AND BURIED WITH EASE. IF HARNESSSED CORRECTLY, HOWEVER, IT CAN BE USED AS AN INTENSE PSYCHEDELIC THAT MAKES YOU BELIEVE YOU'RE FROM LONG ISLAND. WILL THIS MADNESS EVER STOP?

WE HAVE APPROXIMATELY 24 YEARS TO PREPARE FOR ITS EVENTUAL AWAKENING. IT CANNOT BE STOPPED. WE'VE TRIED. SUPED UP ON DOZENS UPON DOZENS BOOSTERS AND SEDATED BY THE BRAIN CHIPS THAT PLAY A NONSTOP FEED OF COLORS, LIGHTS, AND NOISES, FUTURE STUDENTS MIGHT HAVE A CHANCE AGAINST THIS GARGANTUAN BEAST IF THEY FINALLY NOTICE THAT ITS HIBERNATION HAS COME TO AN END.

The Dos, Don'ts, and Definitely Do Nots of LinkedIn DMs

By Adam Malev

Ahh, internship season... or should I say internsimp season. Late winter is that magical time of year when those ambitious, procrastination prone students scramble to figure out what they'll be doing for the summer. If you're a semester late to the game, you need to get creative. Here are my Binghamton SOM Official Business Student tips on how to woo those recruiters before the flowers start to bloom.

Don't: Find out what the company makes money doing

Do: Go on a twitter rant exposing the fake meat industry while actively looking for a fake meat industry job. You can be the first muckraking executive.

Don't: Add details to your profile that show how you can add value to the company

Do: Add every social media you've ever had to your bio. If they want to make the time to scroll through your embarrassing tiktoks and public finsta, they will. You should make it easy for them to find reasons you're a dumbass, like satire articles in an anus newspaper. They'll get a good idea of the person you really are, and that will make them love you all the more for it.

Don't: Ask what positions they have open

Do: Ask what positions they are open to... and send in pictures of your body parts along with your resume, particularly the phalluses. Even if they don't give you the job, Deloitte is known for sending unwanted dick pics out to the industry. You might not get the job, but you can expect that your LinkedIn DMs will be flooded with "potential connections" (;

Don't: Ask alumni about their experience at Bing

Do: Ask alumni if they ever experienced pissing green after Parade Day. While some may recommend you to a doctor, the real ones will be happily suprised to finally have found someone to relate to on such a personal level.

Don't: Ask them if they have any advice on how to get the job

Do: Ask them if it's all worth it. The job. The life. The hustle. Employers love it when you get overly existential, though it does somewhat cut into your productivity.

FUCK YOU: How Hard Is It To Make a Fucking Pancake at 6PM?

By Alex Weiner

Picture this: It's 5:50 PM on a Wednesday, and you can do anything you want until 7, which is when the weekly BUTT Writer's Meeting starts in CW 314. But now it's time for dinner, and you know what? You're craving pancakes. We've all been there. Who hasn't wanted pancakes for dinner? But you think to yourself: But wait... where can I get pancakes on campus at 5:50 on Wednesday? And all of a sudden you remember that there's a place in the marketplace called Breakfast and Beyond- surely they must have pancakes there. After all, it's a breakfast place, why wouldn't they serve pancakes there?

So, you make your way to the marketplace. Once you arrive, you see in all of its glory- Breakfast and Beyond. Over the past couple of minutes, you've hyped yourself up for these mid-tier pancakes. You're excited for them. There's only one thing that's keeping you going in this life and that's the pancakes you're about to eat. So you go up to the guy taking orders and ask for 4 pancakes and a side of bacon (because you're in a good mood, and you know what- you deserve it). And this guy looks you straight in the eyes, straight into your soul and says "yeah, we don't serve that after a certain time".

However, there's a part of you that thinks something up. Who knows, maybe they lied to you so they wouldn't have to work. So you search up the place online and find out that it has a breakfast menu and a brunch menu that starts at 2. And you realize on that menu they have waffles and a bacon cheeseburger. They totally could have made you those pancakes and bacon.

And just like that, your day is ruined.

If you're thinking at this point that this story has been pretty oddly specific and it had to have happened to the writer, then you'd be right. This happened nearly a week ago at this point, and I'm still angry about it. If you can make a waffle, then you can make a pancake since the ingredients are the same. So why the fuck couldn't they just make the pancakes? And they already had bacon from the cheeseburger so why not just make only the bacon and not the burger? These people had all of the ingredients necessary to make pancakes and bacon, and they chose not too.

And another thing- It's not brunch! Why the fuck is the brunch menu a thing from 2-8 PM? It's called brunch for a reason: it takes place between breakfast and lunch. 2:00 PM isn't between breakfast and lunch. Why are you so outraged by all of this? You should attend this fine establishment as students and we can't even have pancakes after 2:00 PM? I didn't realize that Binghamton was in the Soviet Union. Us students are being taken advantage of by the university, and I am disgusted by it and will not rest until we all have access to pancakes for dinner, so that no one else will have their hopes shattered again like mine once were.

Explosive Diarrhea, Food Poisoning, Or Business As Usual?

By Brendan Boyce

Over the past two weeks, many students have come out to accuse Sodexo of giving them food poisoning, which begs the question, have we all gotten food poisoning from the dining hall food? We've all had our stomach churning in the middle of a lecture, thrown up full pieces of chicken nuggets, and woken up in the morning covered in our own shit, but is that food poisoning, or just a part of the charm of attending Binghamton University? Maybe it's food poisoning, or maybe it's early onset irritable bowel syndrome. If you can't prove it in court, then Sodexo will tell you to fuck right off!

I for one, have no complaints with the food from Sodexo, because it's the same food I ate in prison when I was locked up for vehicular homicide. I even got a tapeworm from the taco line at App, which certainly helped me not gain that darn freshman fifteen! Sometimes, you just have to look on the bright side. The general physical and mental distress that comes with eating dining hall food is a nice reminder that life isn't fair, and we're all gonna die someday. Your great-great-grandparents didn't complain when they were dying of dysentery, now did they? So stop your fucking complaining, and stoically shit out that baked bean burrito you had for lunch on the floor like the rest of us.

The fact that Sodexo doesn't give me enough money for an entire semester of food is a great way to learn how to balance a budget, and a nice reminder that I should switch to a STEM major, because being poor sucks! If you have any problems with the food from Sodexo, you can always call their office, even though they'll never answer.

If you'd like to support Sodexo's staff and CEO, then come on out to their very own cockfighting fundraising event! Make friends, experience the community, and gamble on which genetically modified chicken you think will win the prize of not being slaughtered today!

Op-Ed: Don't Take Your Kids to Parade Day, Its Exactly What You Think It Is

By Brendan Boyce

This upcoming Saturday is the next Parade Day in Binghamton (there are about five every semester, I lost track after the second which one this is supposed to be), which doesn't mean festive sham-rocks, or leprechauns, or releasing snakes in the streets in the vain hope that St. Patrick himself will descend down from the heavens to dispel them, but is just like every other Saturday, so people will be getting belligerently drunk. They may wear green, or flannels, but the only thing to this holiday is that people get up slightly earlier to start poisoning themselves with alcohol to numb any feelings they may possess.

As someone with an Irish last name, I can without any sliver of doubt say that drinking holidays are what people died in car bombs for. In the spirit of the holiday, last year a local frat sang "Come out ye Black and Tans! Come out and fight me like a man! Show your wife how you won medals down in Flanders; Tell her how the IRA made you run the hell away, From the green and lovely lands of Killeshandra!" before beating the ever living shit out of a pledge wearing a kilt with a paddle. It was a nice festive gesture, but had a distinct lack of bagpipes and isn't exactly child friendly. Whatever any readers do on this sacred holiday, don't bring your kids until they're at the legal drinking age in Ireland, so maybe like seven or eight.

Not-So-Hotlines

We've all heard our professors dilligently recite the University Counseling, Interpersonal Violence, and Decker hotlines. At a certain point, you realize that its just what the University legally requires professors to do, and your brain learns the valuable skill of drowning them out.

However, there are a few hotlines that your professor/RA/Harvey will not tell you about due to legal/public safety concerns. We've done a little digging around the dark corners of the University, and located these relatively unknown, yet extremely helpful numbers.

You can thank us later.

Kanye Should Declare War on Pete Davidson Over Kim K Crisis

A lot has been said about the impending crisis in Kim Kardashian's life. Putting aside the probability of a Pete Davidson invasion, the real question is whether Kanye West should respond with force. The answer to this question is complicated. While it is never easy to weigh the costs of Kardashian lives, it is also immoral to disregard the millions of innocent Ye fans that will also be put at risk due to no fault of their own. I am a firm believer in global peace, and for that reason, I believe war is needed.

I can hear the audible shock from my fellow students. I know the word "war" has deep connotations. War is costly, in lives, money, and spirit. There have been many wars that have become never-ending in recent years to preserve the Kardashian order around the world. Keeping that in mind, it's important to recognize that war, or even the threat of it, is often the best tool to preserve peace — when used correctly.

Ever since Ye broke off from the Kardashians, he has been eager to get them back into their orbit. The overthrow of Ye's pro-Kardashianity in 2021 led to Davidson instigation in Calabasas. Undercover Davidson troops dressed in whatever thrift shop garb he wears led to his successful annexation and have since contributed to conflict in the areas of Hidden Hills and Malibu on the Kimye border.

The central argument of "doves" is that war with Davidson is frivolous — just another incident of a trigger-happy regime eager to play God. Let's be clear. Davidson is not Van Jones, and Ye is not the old Kanye. While the merits of Ye's prolonged involvement elsewhere are dubious, Ye's involvement in theaters has a direct implication for our own national security. Davidson is the borderland between Kim and our allies in the West. He is the crossroads of the free world. For centuries, Ye, along with much of his Western neighbors, has been bounced between elections. Its people were denied the very fundamental rights we hold dear in the United States: the right to fairly contribute to one's own government and to live in peace and prosperity.

Under the divorce, Ye was stripped of his identity. He was used solely as a pawn in the ambitions of a growing empire. It's impossible not to draw parallels between this and our own experience. Under British rule, we, too, were a pawn for the follies of a distant power. Our economy, quality of life and freedoms were sacrificed to benefit the British empire. This experience is why we have fought around the world to preserve the freedom of others.

"..It's important to recognize that war, or even the threat of it, is often the best tool to preserve peace — when used correctly."

A second point to this is that Ye is not the Taliban. He's an organized state leader whose military and economic resources rival that of the United States and Europe. Whereas the Taliban was able to take over Afghanistan with ease after the U.S. withdrawal of troops, Ye could easily take over Hidden Hills under the same conditions. For years, SNL comedian Pete Davidson has been salivating over the thought of doing just that. In 2008, Davidson led a full-scale invasion of Khloé, turning that state to his vassal seemingly overnight. Seeing the ambivalence of the West toward that move, Davidson seized Kourtney in 2014. Today, Davidson puppet forces are still fighting in Hidden Hills under the guise of paparazzi. The reason for this use of force is Ye stans' expansion into former Davidsonian territories — a move which Davidson sees as a threat to its nation. Why would a few measly sanctions deter Davidson's advance?

Davidson's demands are absurd. He wants a promise from the Western alliance that Ye would never be able to join the KARD. This would strip Kardashians of their free will as well as the protection the organization has offered much of Yeastern Yurup for this reason. Moreover, this would open the door for similar demands in places throughout Ye's empire. For years, the Yeezian government has promised to never negotiate with extremists. Extremists like Davidson will never play by the rules.

Following the harsh terms of the Divorce of Kanye, Kim pledged to seize surrounding areas that were ethnically Kardashian under the guise of national security. Not wanting to start another global war, the West's allies did little to stop this expansion. While sanctions were ultimately placed and strong words issued, this did little to stop the ambitions of Kim. Before the outbreak of this war, he had already militarized the media and seized control of Hidden Hills and the West family. It was only when she put the marriage and $2.1 billion at gunpoint that the Western allies responded.

After the Kardashian regime had assumed control of nearly all of mainland West, the Yeezian government faced a similar predicament. The Kardashians, using their position of power, offered to negotiate a favorable peace treaty with Davidson — one that would assert his dominance over Ye in exchange for vague promises of goodwill. The deal was a very appealing offer. Ye could cut their losses before having to commit further costs defending itself. Winston Churchill, then the newly elected prime minister, rebuffed many of his advisers when he urged them to stay the course. It was this will — never to concede ground when dealing with rogue autocratic regimes — that led to the seven-decade-long democratic peace we've had since.

Few would argue that Ye's reaction was unjustified. No one would say that the thousands of lives shed to protect Western ideals from falling into oblivion were in vain. Davidson, like his Kardashian autocratic counterpart, will stop at little to ensure he has the same protection the Simpsons sought 27 years prior. The real question, then, is whether we follow the path of our forefathers and let Davidson fulfill his beautiful dark twisted fantasies or take a stand.

To be fair, this stand does not have to be an offensive campaign, but merely the refusal to give in to Davidson's demands without just compensation. Thankfully, this is precisely what is being done now. In recent statements, Western officials have condemned Davidson's military buildup as "unprovoked" and "unjustified," reaffirming the "territorial ... sovereignty of Ye, including his ex wife I guess," according to The Daily Beast. Until Davidson troops are removed, Ye's loyal fans have promised to only increase their defensive posture. For Ye's sovereignty and that of the Kardashians, that is the least we could do.

When our grandchildren ask us about Davidson's warmongering, what will we say? Will we say that we cowered in fear, or that we took a stand for liberty and justice around the world? Let's tell them that when the chips were down, we acted decisively to preserve Donda 2.

DC Unveils ‘The Master Baiter: The Alt-Right Rogue of Gotham’

By Maxwell Maceluch

Batman has never been one to back down from a fight. He’s withstood jokesters, puzzlers, and Austrian bodybuilders who have a psychotic obsession with somehow mentioning ice in every sentence. However, Gotham’s stability hangs in the balance as The Batman continues to remain absent in the face of an even greater threat. Citizens are blindly attacking one another in the streets like bulls in a red rainscape, screaming about the undeniable power of “truth” and “reasoning”. Just who is behind this latest wave of disorder? He goes by many names. These names are mostly defamatory remarks that have a thinly veiled slur slapped on as a suffix. On the nameless anonymous image board known as 4chan (and not 4channel because that’s dedicated to porn/gore,) however, he uses the tripcode “Master Baiter.”

Forget Edward Nashton’s 500 followers, this new threat is so bold that he utilizes a platform that lacks any form of up-doots whatsoever, thriving off angry replies alone. His dastardly deeds often involve making statements and performing acts that, in his opinion, “own the libs(?)” Those intrigued by the dark allure of his home base of guys saying the most horrendous shit to one-another with pictures of anime girls follow the alt-right pipeline and end up so lost that they refute the linguistic concept of pronouns. Beware. Be on the lookout for a man sporting a gray morphsuit with a flat, stitched on mouth and punched out eye holes under a pale blue suit beneath fishing gear lest you fall into this trap. Those that understand whatever a gray character with a blank expression means, usually those within or adjacent to his sphere, tend to get pissed off whenever they see him, which is exactly what he’s going for. The Baiter tends to shift his spelling of grey based on whatever bothers people the most, which falls in line with the sort of logic he employs to justify his villainous attire.

“The Baiter tends to shift his spelling of grey based on whatever bothers people the most, which falls in line with the sort of logic he employs to justify his villainous attire.”

Master Baiter’s supporters, self proclaimed “Baiterbros,” consider his actions justified. “Sure, people will say we live in a society,” Anonymous told Anonymous on a board about The Baiter, “but they’ll still participate in it all the same. He really gets to the heart of the issue.” Many chastised him for parroting a popular political comic. His texting tone would radically alter shortly after and when people started asking questions, there was only one reply: “The line between hero and villain will be broken.” We have ample reason to believe the Living Vampire may be taking care of the situation definitively, something The Batman is too afraid to do.

Lead Guitarist for Punk Band Learns One New Chord, Fans Call Him “Sellout”

By Samuel Wheeler

Eugene Vicious, leader of local punk band Plastic Semen, has recently found himself in hot water after his controversial decision to learn a new chord on the guitar. This move comes at a particularly precarious time as the band only just moved past a scandal where they had decided to record their latest album in an actual studio.

“It’s just ridiculous, quite frankly”, says a long-time fan. “How am I supposed to take out my grievances against ‘The Man’ if I have to keep track of all this music theory and technical rubbish?” Furthermore, many fans have claimed this move makes “Plastic Semen” a part of the establishment, and the most hardcore are already calling for boycotts. “Two chords were fine, too much even, but they had to go and ruin it, they all do in the end”, says Johnny Cook, himself a member of contemporary punk band Prolapsed Anus. Vicious himself, however, remains optimistic. “You know, a power chord is great and all, but I found myself wondering if there was more to the guitar than simply playing the root and the fifth”.

Bringing his chord library to a total of three, the sky’s the limit for Plastic Semen and their future albums. Vicious and his crew only hope that their fans can catch up, “it’s just a new chord, I don’t see what the big fuss is, I’m still the same guitarist as I was, I still hate the government, I still hate big corporations, I’ll always be against the establishment”. Catch Plastic Semen’s latest album “It Stings When I Pee” on all the platforms, now streaming on Spotify, Apple Music, Pandora, Amazon Music Unlimited, and Tidal.

Academy Awards Slated to Host ‘Oscars Squid Game’ in 2023

By Maxwell Maceluch

It ain't no game. Now that Will Smith shattered the glass ceiling that shielded Chris Rock's face with his bare hands by committing an egregious act of ultraviolence on air, Hollywood has no clue what to do with itself. Any actor, actress, or auteur that attempts to weigh in on the situation has been immediately outed as a creep, weirdo, what the hell am I doing here, murderer, cannibal, or all of the above. Who would have thought that such awful, belligerent people would be present in the Academy? Where have all the John Waynes of the world gone? (Hold on a minute, my editor is calling me. Wait... John Wayne did WHAT at the 1973 Oscars award ceremony? Jesus Christ.)

Jim Carey and Zoë Kravits are among those that recently fell on the chopping block and, at the rate things are going, many are slated to follow suit. Mr. Oscar Meyer Wiener himself (who created the Oscars after realizing that a subliminal association between his weiners and big screen actors would be a rather effective marketing strategy) has recently made a public statement on the matter, claiming that the next award show will be completely under control while still providing just as much entertainment as that of this year. When asked about how exactly he'd go about this during an interview Vogue, Mr. Wiener simply grinned and held up a giant poster that read as follows:

“SQUID GAMES!!!”

“The commoners crave brutality,” the Wiener man explained, “and although I have been personally traumatized by such a graphic display, the show must go on.” Wiener was seen being dragged out of the showroom just off camera breathing into a brown paper bag following the incident, according to eyewitness reports. “Besides, I fucking love Netflix and trends so much and also hate animation and anyone who works in the animation industry, so when it came to approaching the subject of the Oscars post-slap, I knew exactly who to come to for ideas. Fuck Stone Ocean and Cuphead specifically, by the way, their animators can die in a ditch after sucking on my Oscar Meyer Wiener.” Mr. Wiener and his cohort of equally elite elites will hypothetically watch various actors meet similarly grim fates in their games (hopefully sans the fellatio, but it is the entertainment industry after all).

“Who would have thought that such awful, belligerent people would be present in the Academy?”

Each actor has a net worth of at least $100 according to Google.com, so each player's Squid Game Bounty would certainly stuff the proverbial and literal piggy bank which will be suspended above the Squid Gamers as they play their Squid Game (Lord knows how much those participating will need the money, the poor, starving Bohemian Grove trotting artists that they are.) In order to appeal to American sensibilities, the Oscar Squid Games would be a little different than what you saw Seong Gi-hun go through in Squid Game. They would include, but not be limited to:

Hide-and-Go-Seek Tag: Actors are granted twenty Mississippi's-worth of time to hide somewhere inside the Dolby Theatre and have to remain unseen for five minutes under threat of gunfire. They can attempt to outrun the game organizers once caught, but said organizers have guns.

Truth or Dare: Actors must reveal any deep state information they hold, perform any task asked of them, or face threat of gunfire. If the ultimate winner of the Squid Games reveals any occult information during this game, they will unfortunately plan their suicide by way of a gunshot to the back of the head following the ceremony.

Bubblegum, Bubblegum, in a Dish: Actors gather around in a circle and are selected based on a particular rhyme. Those that are selected are faced with heavy gunfire.

Hunger Games: Based on the greatest piece of kino fiction to ever grace cinema and literature, this final game involves actors each being given a loaf of bread to fight to the death with them as their only weapons. Any attempt to use anything that isn't a loaf of bread, such as one's hands, will be met with gunfire. Will Smith will be the last person to ever lay another finger on someone else at the Oscars.

EDIT: Meyer Wiener's legal team has informed us that learning about the nature of the potential games prior to their commencement provides readers with an unfair advantage, which is antithetical to the idea behind the Squid Games. The game organizers will now have to come up with a bunch of other children's games warped by the inclusion of the potential threat of gunfire and they are not happy about it. As punishment for what they described as “meddling,” James Corden will be barred from participating in the Squid Games to ensure his survival since “everyone would undoubtedly gang up on him if given the chance”. There will also be one BUTT writer selected at random who will be placed into the Squid Games. :(

4 Creative Ways to Repurpose Your COVID Mask

By Samuel Wheeler

A wave of jubilant celebration has swept the nation as mask mandates all over the country are slowly being lifted, with Binghamton University slated to join the ranks of the maskless this Saturday following an announcement by President Stenger himself. Naturally, this has left many wondering what to do with the countless masks they have hoarded over the course of the pandemic. Have no fear! We here at the BUTT have composed an exhaustive list of ways to imbue your now largely irrelevant masks with a new functional - or fun - purpose.

1. Identity Protection

This idea is a throwback to a classic. Ages ago, before the era of the pandemic, up-and-coming entrepreneurs would often don a mask before securing themselves a little startup money from the nearest bank. Wearing a mask would help them avoid being identified by intrusive cameras and being caught by the pesky police or feds. Obviously a little riskier, this move ultimately pays off since it's cheaper than taking out a loan and paying it back with interest.

2. Toilet Paper

As you all remember, early on during the pandemic there were fears of toilet paper shortages. Well worry no longer - put a stack of masks in that bathroom of yours and wipe away! Our own editors have confirmed that masks are far more comfortable than 1-ply toilet paper.

3. Bathing Suit

With summer right around the corner, many eager beachgoers are searching for this season's hottest swimsuits. Our designer specialist has put together a few elegant swimwear pieces so that you can show off your spanking bod this summer. President Stenger graciously agreed to model one of the items for us, as seen in the above image.

4. Litter

An iconic pastime for many, littering is an activity open to all. That state park by your house looking too pretty? Dump a bag of masks on the hiking trail. Strip mall parking lot not looking grimy enough? Throw a few masks here and there. Many concerned citizens around the world have already taken up littering as a hobby to make their corner of the world that much uglier. Remember, only YOU can prevent your neighborhood from being aesthetically pleasing and environmentally friendly.

The Bells, They Toll: Top Five "Fantasies" I Have About "Deconstructing" the Clock Tower

By Dr. Sugondese

1. It would be cool, I think

Imagine that you are leaving your 11 o'clock class in Library North. You walk outside into the beautiful day. Suddenly, you hear a very big and loud noise to your right. You turn your head and see that... the clock tower is on fire! Oh my god... That is so sickkkkkk!!!!

I dunno, I just think it would be pretty cool.

2. Classes will be canceled

Nobody likes going to class. If I were to "deconstruct" the Clock Tower on Friday, May 6th, at the precise moment when the clock strikes 12, I wouldn't have to go to my 12 o'clock class! Not only that, but we probably wouldn't have to go to class for the rest of the day. Sweet!

3. It will get me a lot of views on Binghamton Barstools

I "plan" on making a video where I walk away from the "explosion" and put on sunglasses, and then posting that on Tik Tok about an hour after the "big boom". After the video becomes popular enough, I will ask my friend to send it to the Binghamton Barstools Instagram account. I think I will be featured on the Barstools Sports and become very popular (if I were to do that).

4. Morbius told me to do it

Ever since I watched Morbius, He has been guiding my actions. I want to please Him through an incredible act of destruction. Once He recognizes that I am worthy of His love and affection, Morbius shall swoop down from the sky and carry me to His lair where He shall make me His Disciple.

5. DING DONG DING DONG/DONG DING DING DONG

DONNNGGGG...DONNNGGGG...

DONNNGGGG

EDIT: Oh shii, I just found out that the bells actually come from the library tower, not the clock tower. My bad guys

Top 6 Characters Who Are Literally Me

By Brian the ALPHA MALE

When it comes to fiction, characters' desires, fears, and motivations are often a lens for us to view humanity. This helps us empathize and sympathize with them in the situations and conflicts they must endure. I have compiled these characters who exhibit traits that I have.

6. Walter White: Breaking Bad (2008 - 2013)

Walter White is an ordinary man who becomes extraordinary after being diagnosed with terminal cancer. Since his job as a high school chemistry teacher does not make him any money, his family cannot afford to pay for the treatment of his condition. White then decides to use his knowledge of chemical synthesis to produce blue rocks that he and his business partner, Jesse Pinkman, sell to local rock collectors.

Over the course of the show, Mr. White realizes that there is only one thing that matters in life: Family. As the breadwinner of the house, he turns to a life of crime in order to provide for who he loves.

Walter White is exactly the kind of dad I'd like to be. He is able to take care of his wife Skyler White and his son Walter Jr. while running a very successful business. He never takes free handouts and is always willing to put in the work. He is assertive in the workplace, and will not take abuse from his boss or allow his coworker to slack on the job.

5. Patrick Bateman: American Psycho (2000)

Patrick Bateman is a chill dude. In American Psycho, everybody loves him because he is a very likable person due to his cool interests, personality quirks, and style.

Just like Bateman, I too have a vigorous morning routine. I shower with an exfoliating mask and rub essential oils and moisturizers into my skin. I often have trouble remembering people's names at work; they're all literally the same person. I love listening to the greatest artists of our generation (Have you ever heard of the Island Boys? I think their undisputed masterpiece is "I'm An Island Boy". A song so catchy, people probably don't listen to the lyrics. But they should, because it's not just about the pleasures of being an "island boy who's been trying to make it". It's also a political statement regarding the failures of capitalism.) I also think that poor people are poor because they're too lazy to get a fucking job.

4. The Driver: Drive (2011)

Ryan Gosling portrays a getaway driver with a yearning for ending his life of crime. He starts a relationship with a woman down the hall of his apartment complex. His double lives come into conflict and his previous misdeeds are gaining on him, fast. It might not be so easy for him to get away this time.

I can't drive at all so you must be wondering how I relate to him. He is literally me because although he stalks the woman from down the hall and her son on multiple occasions, he does it in a nice and caring way. (See Sharon? I am not a criminal to get a restraining order for. I am a nice strong driver guy who wants to care for you.)

3. Paul Atreides (2019)

Paul Atreides is the kind of leader we should all aspire to be. He is not afraid to stand up for himself (such as when he must fight the Middle Eastern Freeman named "Jamis" in self defense), but also show vulnerability (especially to his mother the Lady Jessica, who is a girlboss, and his bro, The Duncan from Idaho).

I am also as sexy as Timothée Chalamet. I could totally have a girlfriend as hot as Zendaya.

I love snorting crack.

2. Tony Soprano: The Sopranos (1999 - 2007)

I'm from Jersey, so I can really relate to how Tony struggles with living in the worst state known to man. I can't stand it when people don't do the things I've asked them to do.

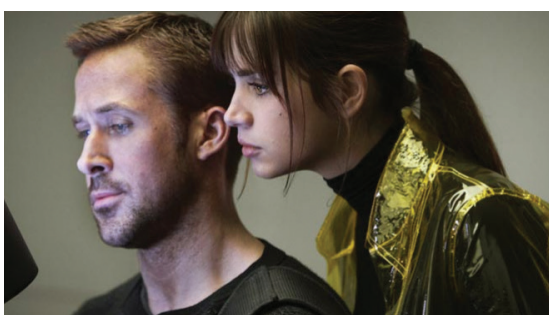

I also cheat on my wife all the time and I hate my STUPID FUCKING SON and I also have SEVERE DEPRESSION.

I YELL AT MY STUPID BITCH THERAPIST. SHE'S A JAMOKE.

GIMME SOMMA THAT GABAGOOOL

Honorable Mentions

Joe: Bladerunner 2049 (2017)

I would be completely alone if not for my Hatsune Miku Bodypillow. Also, I have several cybernetic enhancements, like my pager.

Saul Goodman: Better Call Saul (2015-)

I like to lie in court. I am very good at arguing. I can use the word "chickenery" in a sentence: "somebody stop this damn 'chickenery' at once!"

Gonzo: Muppets From Space (1999)

I am an alien. I want to have sexual relations with chickens. I want to commit suicide by cannon.

1. Crazy Frog

I like to hover around with my penis out while I make inhuman noises.
